

THE JACKSON LEGACY

A PUBLICATION OF THE HENRY M. JACKSON FOUNDATION

"Today and in the years to come our continuing goal is to perpetuate Scoop's legacy."

FROM THE CHAIRMAN

With this fall newsletter, I welcome the opportunity to bring you up to date on some of the Foundation's activities over the past several months. We are very proud of the work we and others are doing as part of Scoop's legacy and want to share some of the highlights with you, our friends and supporters. In this issue of the newsletter, you can read about a new documentary film to be aired on public television this winter, called "Subdivide and Conquer: A Modern Western." The film tells the story of urban sprawl and how it is changing the American West. With its focus on finding alternatives to sprawl, the film, which the Foundation supported, builds nicely on several other grants we have made to address this important land use issue. Look for the film on PBS in early 1999!

As part of our ongoing commitment to protect the Northwest, the Foundation supported a National Park Service project to preserve an important archeological site in North Cascades Park. We were delighted to see so many of the Foundation's friends at the dedication of the Rock Shelter Trail and the annual "Scoop's Troops" reunion and picnic afterwards.

As always, we continue to support the Henry M. Jackson School of International Studies at the University of Washington in many vital ways. In this issue, we profile two outstanding graduate students who have received Jackson Fellowships to pursue their studies in Russian and Asian history. We are also proud of our efforts to bring people together who share a common concern for human rights—both in Russia, where our funding is focus, and globally. During the past few months the Foundation convened two important conferences—one in Moscow involving human rights activists, and one in New York for other national foundations. Both sessions raised thoughtful and interesting questions.

Finally, you will also find news about two projects that promote public service: a conference we sponsored at West Point as part of the National Military and Civilian Service Partnership, and an innovative program called the Giraffe Project, which promotes community service in schools.

As we begin the Foundation's 16th year, we are grateful for the continuing generosity and interest of our supporters. Today and in the years to come, our continuing goal is to keep Scoop's legacy vibrant and meaningful. We hope you enjoy this newsletter—and please let us hear your comments and reactions to our work.

Warm regards,

Helen Jackson

Stanley Golub

First President Helped Establish Jackson Mission

The Board and staff of the Jackson Foundation mourn the death of the Foundation's first President, Stanley Golub, who passed away on October 14 at the age of 85. He served as a member of the Board from 1983 to 1998.

"He was a very close and beloved friend of Scoop and the entire Jackson family," said Helen Jackson. "Stan played a pivotal role in establishing the direction and mission of the Foundation. He inspired others through his quiet leadership. Scoop and I admired his loyalty and valued his friendship highly."

Born in St. Louis, Stanley Golub grew up in Seattle and earned a law degree from the University of Washington Law School, where he and the late Senator were classmates. He practiced law, then went to work in a Seattle-based jewelry firm found-
